THE PRODUCTIVE POWER OF THE SOUTH. Our enemies are not to be deceived by the statistics of our army, we refer him to the statistics of our export of wheat and flour, in former years, which will scarcely fail to satisfy him. The present wheat crop, now nearly ready for the sickle, covers a larger breadth of ground than was ever before planted, and it is admitted by all to be the most promising crop ever known in the Southern country.

An abundant yield is now beyond any contingency, and will, in all probability, be sufficient to furnish bread to our people at home, and to our armies in the field, and leave a surplus for export. Independent of wheat, our former cotton fields are now producing immense crops of corn, peas, rice, and other produce for man and beast, besides sweet and Irish potatoes, sugar-corn and sorghum.

We will have more hogs to fatten this year—five or ten times more—than were ever previously raised and put on our markets, and will doubtless have quite enough of pork and lard to supply all our wants.

There is scarcely a tan yard in the Confederacy that has not been enlarged and extended, and most of the planters are tanning for themselves. So there is no probability of our suffering for leather or shoes.

We have plenty of arms, and can make our own powder, and the production of iron is rapidly increasing. Then, what indispensable article do we lack to render us entirely independent? It is that of clothing, and, strange to say, very little attention has been paid, by our public authorities, to its essential production. Our old stock of clothing is fast wearing out, the production is not half equal to the demand, and it has become a positive and pressing necessity to increase our means of supply.

If this war continues, we will be extended and enlarged, and the old ones must be replaced, and the hand of industry must be induced to take hold of the spinning-wheel and hand-loom, in every hamlet and cottage in the country. The question is, not how cheap we can be supplied, but how are we to be supplied at all. It will be safe to assume that we will have to rely mainly on home production, which leads to the inquiry: How are we to increase the means of supply? It will certainly not be done by the legislative restrictions on prices. High rates must be looked to as a moving cause. That our safety should depend on high prices, yes, extortionate prices, is an uncomfortable reflection; but it is an ordeal we are doomed to pass through, and the difficulty ought to be willingly met and overcome by every lover of his country.

Prices must go up to a point that will remunerate the hand-loom and spindle, or we must be without a sufficient supply.

Capitalists will not engage in new manufacturing enterprises, unless there is a prospect of great gain, and these must not be restricted by legislative enactments, or our factories will be suffered to wear out and burn up without an effort to renew them; and as for new establishments to be erected, that is out of the question with the existing state of public sentiment in and out of Congress, and our State Legislatures.

I hope to amount that has been expected in importing calicoes, handkerchiefs, and various cloths, hosiery, and the thousand of pin cracker of Yankee manufacture that load the ships running the blockade, had been expended in machinery for the manufacture of the necessary articles, we would now be in a situation to carry on the war within ourselves and to put the Yankees at defiance, but unfortunately for us, public opinion has sanctioned the idea that he who exchanges the last golden dollar, and imports Yankee ten-cent rates, and sells it for three dollars a yard, is a benefactor to his country, while the ingenious producers at home is branded with infamy, and indicted for extortion for selling a home-made article for a dollar and a half.

Our experience in the salt production affords a valuable lesson on the stimulating effects of high prices. The unreticent high price of salt during the last summer no doubt helped to save our country—and one thing is certain, that our meat could not have been saved without it. And so it will be with cloth. If prices be kept down by legal restrictions, the hand spindle and loom will be restrained and discouraged, and will not be resorted to as a priced article to spin and weave for a livelihood, while there is no better prospect than that of competing with factories at forty and fifty cents a yard. You may traverse the country from one end to the other, and find persons who can earn their bread at such prices. Twelve to fifteen thousand pairs of cards, industriously worked, will produce as much cloth as a factory of eight thousand spindles, and three hundred looms; but as long as factory cloth is sold at forty five and fifty cents a yard, the cards will not be industriously worked.

If there are not factories enough to supply all our wants—and there are certainly not half enough—then it becomes a positive necessity to stimulate private enterprises in the line of cloth making, and all legal restraints on the advance of factory will serve as a clog on expansive production, both of the power and hand loom. If Congress and the State Legislatures desired to limit production, they could not pursue a more certain policy to effect that end than that of restricting prices, and every such step taken by outsiders will tend to embarrass and ruin our country. When the war commenced, from our limited number of factories, the price of cloth advanced, and the extortion rates, said to be charged by manufacturers—then only sixteen to twenty cents—became a theme for newspaper scribbles and politicians, and our industrious, enterprising manufacturers were berated and stigmatized as little better than highway robbers, and such was the rage of warfare, that the public mind was poisoned against them from the highest circle of politicians to the lowest grade of society. Long discussions in legislative halls at forth in glowing colors the monstrous evil of high prices, devising various modes of restricting them; and Congress wasted time and money enough in such discussions to have paid for importing cards sufficient to supply every working woman in the Confederacy. The result of all this was legal restrictions on prices that transferred profits from the hand of the manufacturer to that of the speculator, and utterly forbade the much needed expansion of manufacturing: either by hand or machinery. Unfortunately for the country, those restrictions as led the people into the delusive hope of cheap supplies, and many who could have made cloth for themselves utterly neglected the hand-loom and spindle, and are now unable to purchase in sufficient quantity at any price.

The unfriendly spirit, manifested in some of the States, particularly in Georgia, against manufacturers, and the uncertainty that has existed as to what restrictions might be thrown around manufacturing by Congress and the several Legislatures, has deterred many who have accumulated money from investing it in English machinery to run the blockade. Large establishments that desired to extend their operations have not earned enough to justify the requisite extraordinary outlay. To import machinery now costs from twelve to fifteen prices, and we feel quite well assured that no large establishment in our country has earned enough in the past two years to pay for the importation of machinery that would add twenty per cent. to their present production, and they will remain as they are, to the great injury of the country, unless there is a change in public sentiment, such as will induce Congress and the State Governments to abandon all restrictions on prices and give full play to every branch of industry. It is exorbitant profits be the result, let them go into the hands of those who earn them, (who will probably use such earnings in a way to strengthen the country,) and not into the hands of speculators, who have amassed fortunes of late, by standing between the manufacturer and consumer. The present policy is calculated to demoralize the community and paralyze home industry.

DOMESTIC INDUSTRY. From the Southern Presbyterian. "HE CARETH FOR THEE?" What a comforting truth is contained in those few words. In hours of dark despondency, that truth has sometimes broken in like sunlight upon the soul.

"He careth for thee?" And who is He? Who is He that has your image hid away in his heart? Who is it that is alive to your interests and watches all your "out goings and in comings," your "down stairs and up stairs?" Is it some weak earthly friend who has no power to aid you, however much he may care for you? Is it some capricious mortal who will think of you to-day, but forget you tomorrow?

O, no! it is the eternal, all-powerful, unchangeable God. "He careth for thee"—for thee weak, so sinful, so short-sighted!—so full of doubt and unbelief.

How does He care for you? Fondly as the bird-god cares for his bird; anxiously as the mother cares for the babe in her arms; tenderly as the father cares for his household; tenderly as the kind physician cares for his patient; probably as the shepherd cares for the flock that he leads upon the green hills.

All day and night, even through the darkest night of affliction, when you are sick, He is not out of your life; when you are lonely, He is not out of your life; when you are sad, He is not out of your life; when you are in trouble, He is not out of your life; when you are in danger, He is not out of your life; when you are in need, He is not out of your life; when you are in sin, He is not out of your life; when you are in death, He is not out of your life; when you are in hell, He is not out of your life; when you are in heaven, He is not out of your life; when you are in glory, He is not out of your life; when you are in love, He is not out of your life; when you are in hate, He is not out of your life; when you are in joy, He is not out of your life; when you are in sorrow, He is not out of your life; when you are in hope, He is not out of your life; when you are in despair, He is not out of your life; when you are in faith, He is not out of your life; when you are in unbelief, He is not out of your life;
